Michael Wale : View From A Shed: Four Seasons as an Urban Farmer before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised View From A Shed: Four Seasons as an Urban Farmer:

View from a Shed is not a book about gardening. It is a book about people who garden. People like Mrs. Fuller, almost 100 years old, who remembers watching supervised Italian POWs during WW1, demolish the local manor house; General Safi who was the Protector of the King of Afghanistan but fled his native country after being imprisoned and tortured; and Michael Wale who has had an allotment since 1980 and has an obsession with compost. Allotments have always been a huge part of urban life and it is that history that informs Wales narrative. As he takes the reader on a tour of the seasons in his allotment world, he engages with his fellow gardeners and tells their stories. The result is a warm and tender story of flowers and food; sheds and greenhouses; gardeners and local councils. This book is an ideal memoir for everyone in the big city who has dreamt about the country life.

About the Author Michael Wale was a familiar figure on London and South East television as a sports presenter on the nightly BBC regional programs for many years. Trained as a journalist he then returned to full time writing, contributing to many publications including the Financial Times magazine, Farm Life and Business Management Today, and The Times. He has a seventeen-year-old daughter, is married and lives in London, a ten-minute walk from his allotment.
